

2nd International Oil and Gas Conference

December 3-5, 2018 Dubai, UAE

The Geopolitics of Energy in Eastern Mediterranean

Benferhat Ahmed

University Center Hassiba Benbouali, Algeria

Due to its strategic position and its rich energetic resources (Oil and gas), the Middle East is of pivotal importance to the big countries. This fuelled a heated rivalry between major regional and international powers over the region. In this intervention, we will focus mainly on the international a regional power behavior of some of the energetic stakeholders in such as Russia, China, the US, Arabia Saudi; Israel and Turkey towards the key oil producing countries in the new gas discoveries in the Levant Basin with view to achieving their energy security. We will start by tackling the international and regional conflict over energy-rich the-Mediterranean regions, without forgetting to go about the pipelines that transport the energetic resources from the production areas to Europe, the energetic dimension of the Syrian crisis.

Biography:

Benferhat Ahmed is currently studying his PhD at University Center Hassiba Benbouali, Algeria.