

The Agile Team: Developing our Journey

Lydia Forsythe, John Schmidt and Brian Hagen
Capella University, USA

The Agile team process is collaborative, iterative and the culmination of idea generation for curriculum development. As a team of subject matter experts, instructional designers, media consultants, and administrative leaders embarked on the design, development and application of the agile inspired process in academia. Our goal remains to define the most current relevant information in an MSN curriculum to provide, scholarly and competency based courses that support learner success.

The process of developing this particular concept is truly a journey of team growth and bonding. As highly driven individuals we build upon each other's strengths moving through a series of important conversations, course iterations and ultimately a product that satisfies the needs of our learners. Together the Agile team engages in idea development for a path to improved course delivery.

Biography:

Dr. Forsythe is a Consultant, Researcher and Faculty with over 25 years of progressively successful experience in diverse clinical and administrative roles at large academic medical centers, multi-facility health systems and academic centers. She received her BA from Marquette University, MSN from the University of Phoenix, and an MA and PhD in Organizational Systems from the Fielding Graduate University. Dr. Forsythe's particular expertise and focus is in healthcare management, leadership, organizational systems, communication, assessment and curriculum development. She is known for her ability to connect individuals for effecting purposeful and successful healthcare and academic experiences, outcomes, and results.